National Service

If it be true that preparation for war makes war inevitable what can be made of Switzerland's case? For generations all the men of Switzerland have been trained to military duty and yet no one of glory and fools has issued from the mountains of the Alps against either Northern Italy or Southern France. To call Switzerland a militarist nation would be slender. It is a peaceful nation, armed to defend itself against militarists. If Canada were to provide some military training for all its young men there would be no danger of our Government plunging in on Michigan or New York. There would be still less danger of being taken up by Canada by Anglophiles of the Foreign pattern. Besides, a Canada capable of self-defence would strengthen the position of the British Empire in the world.—Toronto News.
